

The Sleepy Little Star

By Einav Momi Ben Shushan and Chen Tzafir

High above the world, where the velvet sky meets the purple hills, lived a little star named Pip. Pip was very bright and very round, but most of all, Pip was very, very sleepy.

Pip gave a giant, wobbly yawn. "Hoo-aaa-mmm," he sighed. His points stretched out wide, reaching for the corners of the night, but he just couldn't find a place to tuck himself in.

He saw a cloud drifting by, as soft as a marshmallow and as pink as a rose. Pip hopped onto the cloud and tried to snuggle deep into its fluff.

"He-he-he!" Pip giggled. The cloud was far too tickly! Every time Pip moved, the wispy edges of the cloud tickled his tummy and made him wiggle. He couldn't sleep there.

Then, Pip saw Mona the Moon. She was a silver crescent, shining with a calm and steady light. "Mona," Pip whispered, "I am so sleepy. Can you help me find my bed?"

Mona smiled a silver smile and began to hum a low, sweet melody. The sound was like a warm blanket wrapping around the stars. "Shhh," Mona sang, "the night is quiet. The world is dreaming."

Pip felt his heavy eyes start to close. He drifted away from the tickly cloud and moved slowly through the silent air, following the sound of Mona's song.

He found a secret corner of the sky, filled with a bed of shimmering golden dust. It was warm, still, and perfectly quiet. Pip curled up right in the middle of the gold.

The sky was still. The stars were dim.
Everything was cozy and calm. Now it is time for you to close your eyes, just like Pip, and dream of the beautiful night. Goodnight.
